A Moral Conflict Today,
This moral conflict is the one we have to fight today. Whatsoever is besotten of God must be in this struggle. He is not a God of things as they are, but of things as they ought to be and as they will be some day. There should not be too much belief in the "all's well with the world". Our God is a God of struggle. The Epicureans thought of God as far off and having no concern. The Stoice thought he was everywhere and filled the world, both good and evil. Suicide was their highest hope. This is not a Christian ides, where right is right and whatsoever is begotten of God must overcome the world.

Our Faith the Victory. and having no concern. The Stoics thought he was everywhere and filled the world, both good and evil. Suicide was their highest hope. This is not a Christian idea, where right is right and whatsoever is begotten of God must overcome the world.

Our Faith the Victory.

The second declaration in the text is that this is the victory that hath overcome the world, even our faith, it has been done once. There had
